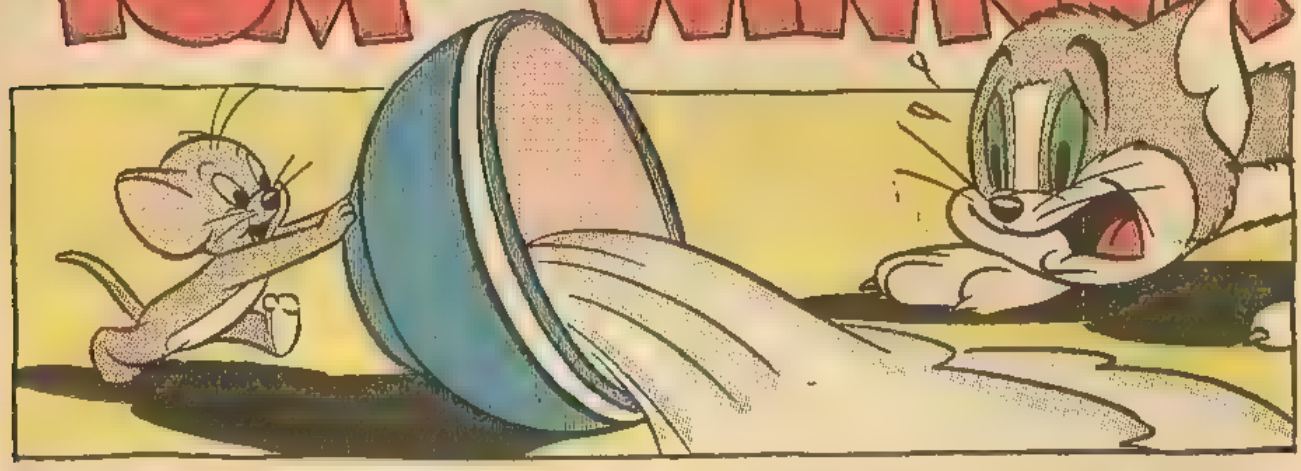
TOM the WINNER



It had been a wild and exciting day for Tom and Jerry. From early morning until late evening they had battled furiously.

The trouble had begun when Tom had insisted that he was the boss.

"I'm the biggest and the smartest!" he had declared again and again. "So, naturally, I'm the boss!"

"You are not!" little Jerry had cried vehemently each time and had yanked Tom's whiskers or pulled Tom's tail.

But Jerry had won the final victory of the day by tipping over Tom's bedtime bowl of milk. Then, before Tom could grab him, he had darted into his little house in the baseboard and barred the door.

"I'll get even with you if it takes all my nine lives!" Tom had hissed through the small, closed door. "Our friendship is over, forever! I'll show you who's boss around here!"

Now the day was ended and the house was dark and quiet. Tom was asleep in his bed in the kitchen. Jerry was slumbering peacefully in his cozy little house behind the safety of the barred door.

Suddenly Jerry wakened with a start. There was a sharp scratching on the door, and Jerry heard a low, shrill whisper.

"Let me in, Jerry! Quick!" It was the voice of his cousin, Molly, who lived in the house next door.

Jerry jumped out of bed and opened the door.

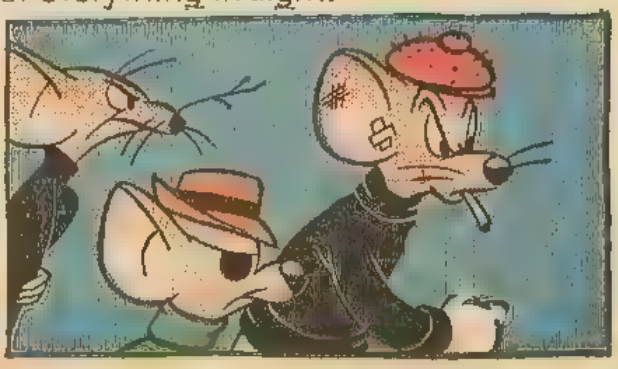
"I've got bad news!" Molly gasped excitedly. "The Fiendish Fields are trying to break into this house!"

"How do you know?" Jerry gulped, his small body taut with fright.

"I couldn't sleep, so I slipped out for a little air. I saw them and heard them talking," Molly explained breathlessly. "They're trying to dig a hole through the cellar wall beside the window frame. They said they were going to move in here to stay! I hurried through our secret entrance to warn you."

"Gosh!" Jerry choked. "What'll we do?"

The Fiendish Fields were wild, lawless field mice who lived in the open country at the edge of the town. They were daring and reckless and strong. When they moved into a house, they brought chaos and havoc and ruin with them. They always drove out all the peaceful city mice and took possession of everything in sight.



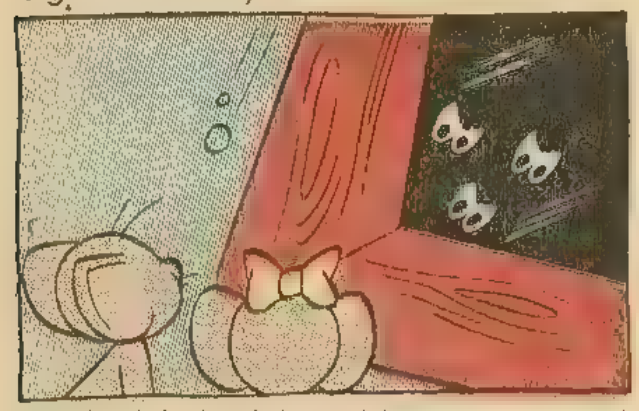
"Let's go and see what they're doing," Jerry whispered finally.

Noiselessly he and Molly crept down the cellar steps. They stood still, listening. They could hear the scratching of sharp claws on the outside cellar wall. Powdery crumbs of cement were sifting down from the edge of the window frame where the Fiendish Fields were working.

"They'll soon dig a hole and come leaping in here," Jerry groaned. "We've got to do something! But what? We can't fight that whole tribe!"

"Why don't you ask Tom to help? He'll drive 'em away!" Molly suggested quickly.

For a moment Jerry's eyes brightened with hope. Then they grew dull again. Tom had vowed to get even with him! Their friendship was ended! Oh, how Jerry regretted that overturned bowl of milk. Tom might forgive him for other things, but not for that. Jerry sighed dismally.



Clunk! Plop! A pebble-sized hunk of concrete dropped on the cellar floor. Jerry could see the tip of a pointed claw in a tiny hole beside the window frame. In another few minutes the hole would be large enough for the Fiendish Fields to slip through into the cellar.

He couldn't wait any longer! He'd have to ask Tom for help!

"You run home, Molly, so you won't get hurt. I'll call Tom," he cried.

He dashed up the stairs to the kitchen and crept across the floor to the sleeping Tom. With a trembling finger he gently touched Tom's face.

"Tom!" he whispered. "Wake up, Tom!"

Tom's green eyes opened. He glared at the quivering Jerry. Then one paw shot forward and grabbed Jerry.

"You won't get away this time!" Tom grated. "I'll make you pay and pay!"

"I'll pay!" Jerry choked. "But please listen, Tom! The Fiendish Fields are breaking into the cellar. They'll swarm all over the house! They'll drive me out! Please stop 'em!"

"The Fiendish Fields!" Tom exclaimed. "Where are they?"

Quickly Jerry told him. "You've got to drive 'em away, Tom!"

Tom's glinting eyes narrowed. "Who's boss here?" he asked sternly.

"You are, Tom!" Jerry quavered.

"Who has to obey the boss?" Tom's voice was harsh.

"I do," Jerry muttered meekly.

"Do you promise to do everything I say from now on?" Tom demanded.

"I promise!" Jerry nodded solemnly.

"Okay!" Tom cried and leaped to his feet. He dashed outdoors through his own little panel in the big kitchen door.

For the next few minutes the night was filled with sputtering hisses, blood-tingling snarls and scurrying footsteps. Then all was quiet.

Tom returned, his green eyes shining with proud triumph.

"They've gone!" he told the still-trembling Jerry. "Now you go to bed. And remember your promise!"

Jerry remembered. The next day was filled with peace and quiet. And, as he rushed around, obeying Tom's orders, Jerry comforted himself with the thought that it was better to have Tom for a boss than to have the Fiendish Fields.

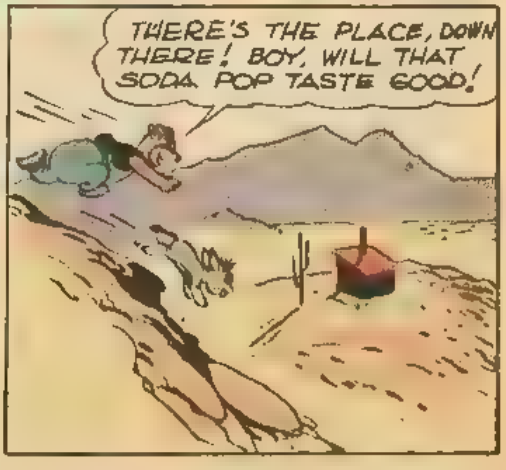
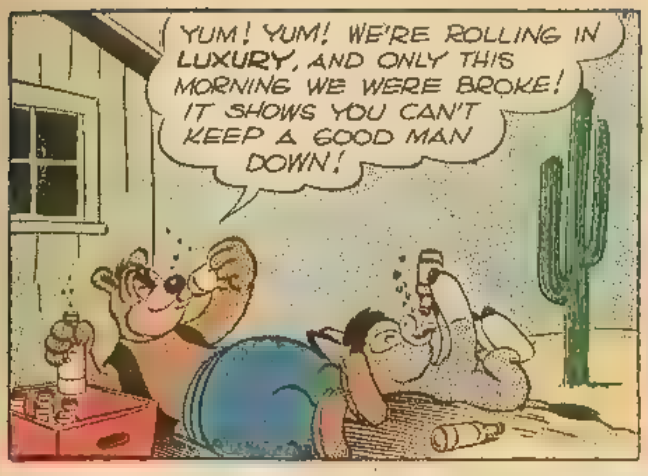
AS A RESULT OF BENNY'S BARGAINING, BARNEY GETS THE MAN'S CABIN AND TWO ACRES OF LAND ALONG WITH THE SODA POP!

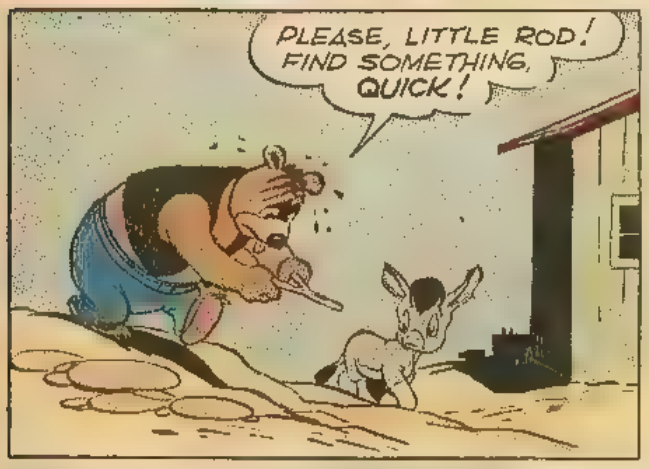


THERE'S THE PLACE, DOWN THERE! BOY, WILL THAT SODA POP TASTE GOOD!

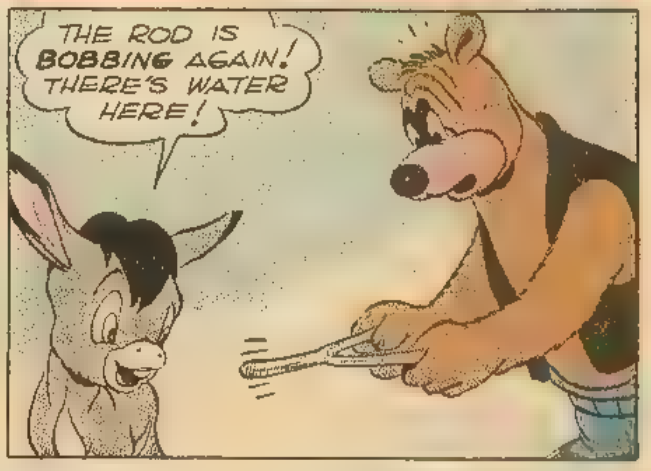


YUM! YUM! WE'RE ROLLING IN LUXURY, AND ONLY THIS MORNING WE WERE BROKE! IT SHOWS YOU CAN'T KEEP A GOOD MAN DOWN!

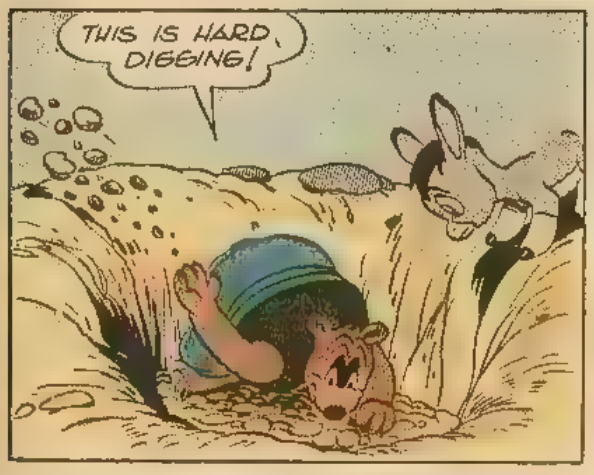
SOON THE SODA POP IS GONE!
WOW! I'M THIRSTY AGAIN!
WE'LL HAVE TO TRY TO FIND ANOTHER WELL WITH THE DIVINING ROD!



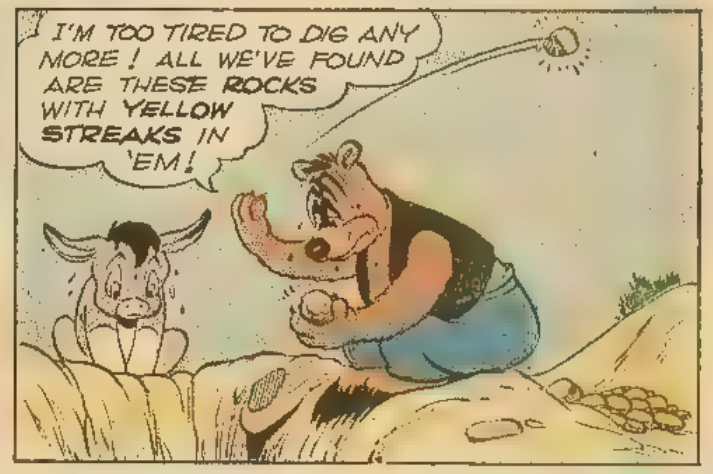
PLEASE, LITTLE ROD! FIND SOMETHING, QUICK!



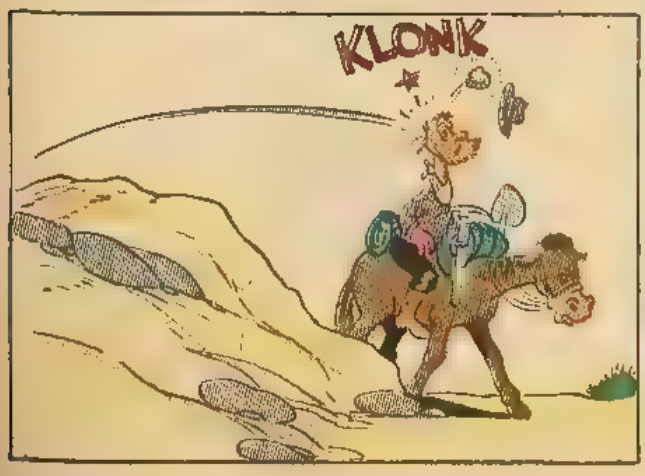
THE ROD IS BOBBING AGAIN! THERE'S WATER HERE!



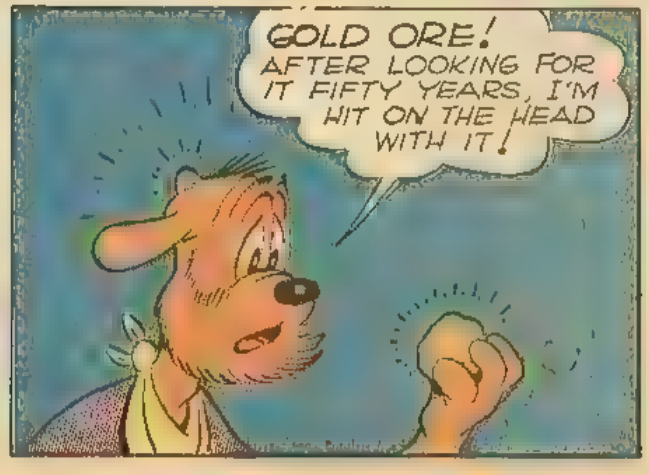
THIS IS HARD DIGGING!



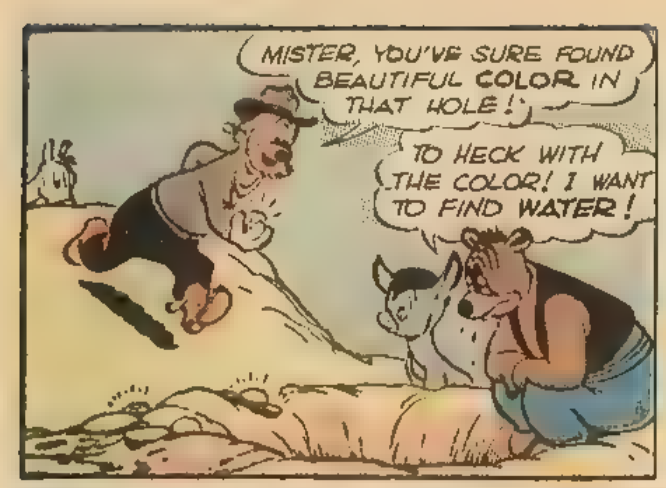
I'M TOO TIRED TO DIG ANY MORE! ALL WE'VE FOUND ARE THESE ROCKS WITH YELLOW STREAKS IN 'EM!

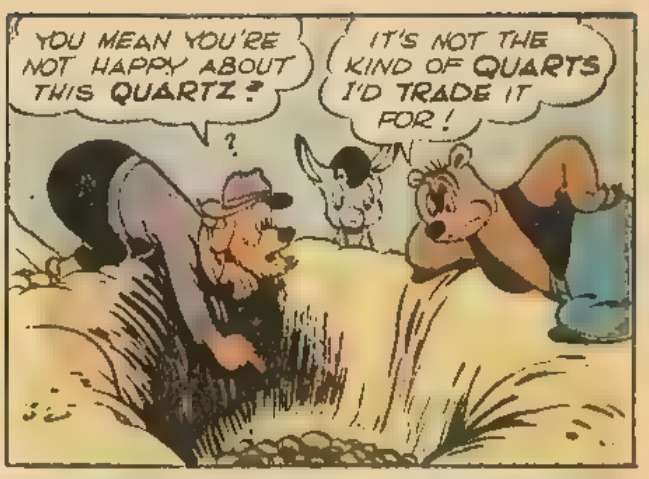


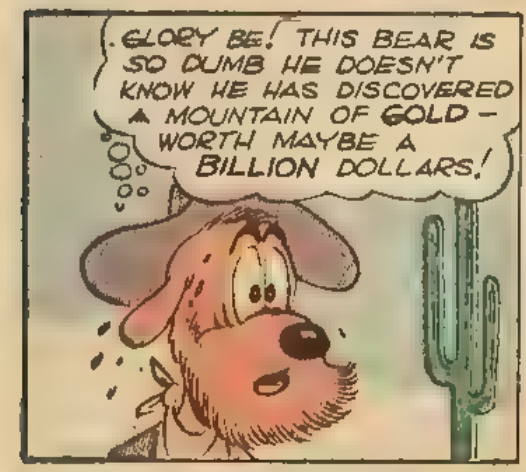
KLONK



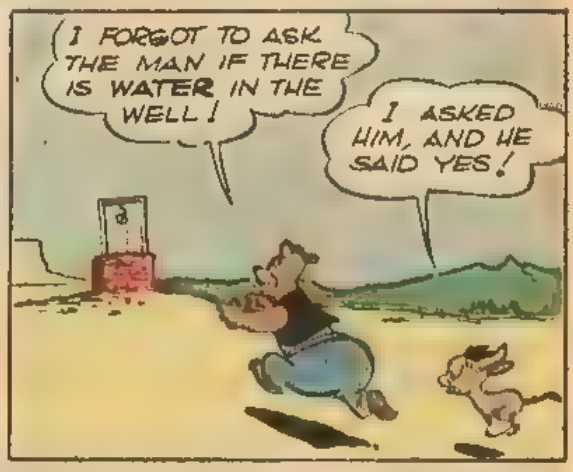
GOLD ORE! AFTER LOOKING FOR IT FIFTY YEARS, I'M HIT ON THE HEAD WITH IT!

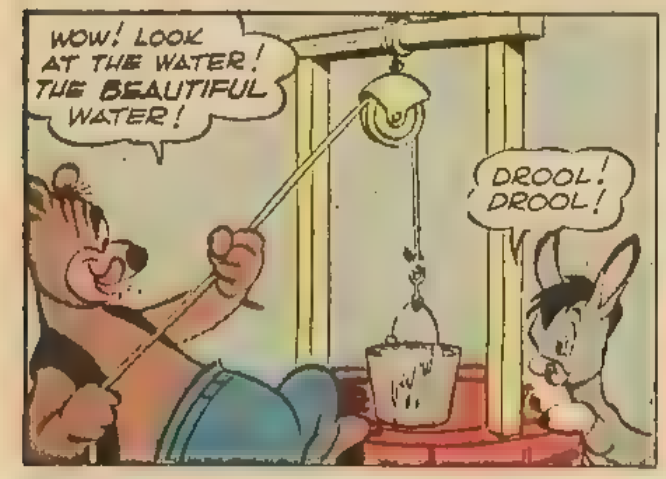


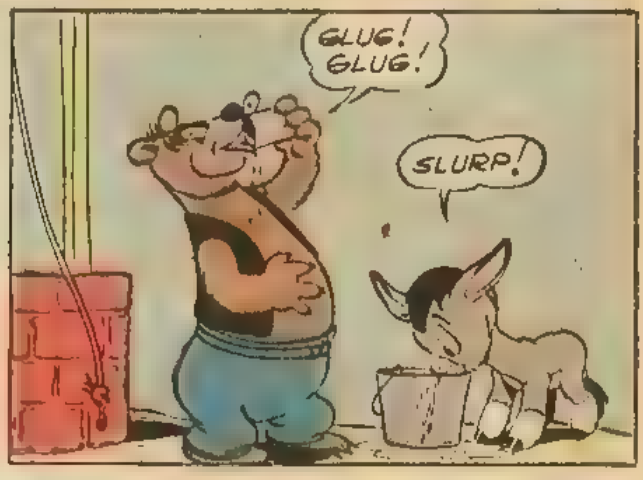


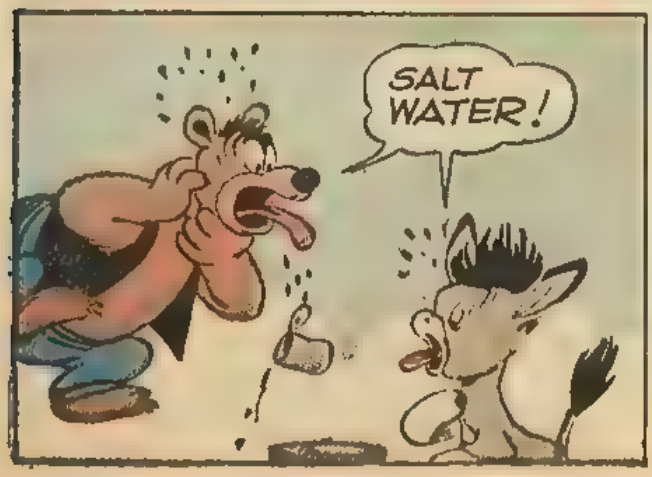


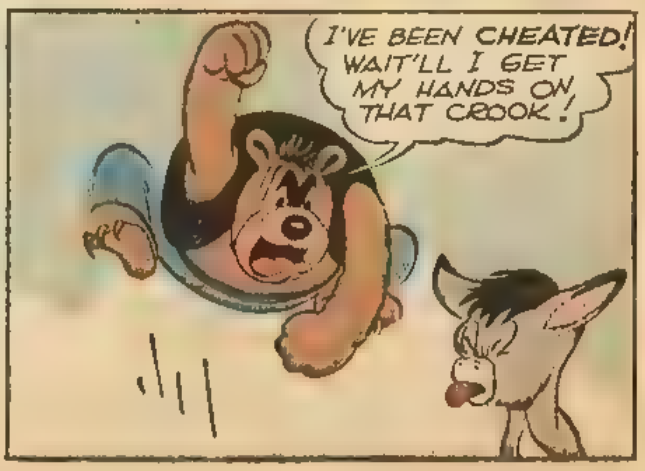
SO ONCE AGAIN BARNEY TRADES OFF A FORTUNE! THIS TIME FOR A LITTLE PATCH OF DESERT WITH A WELL ON IT!

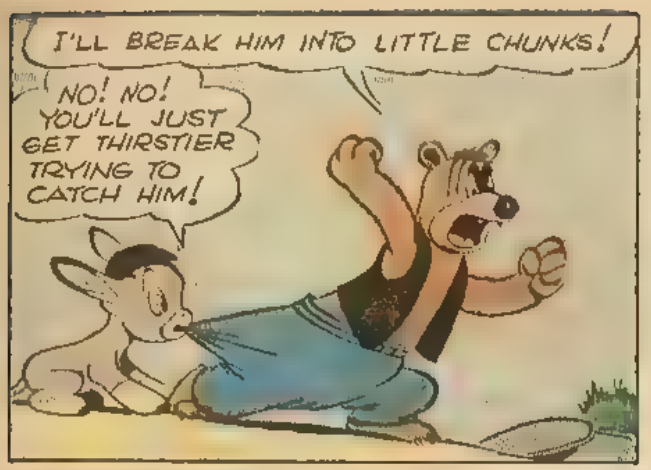


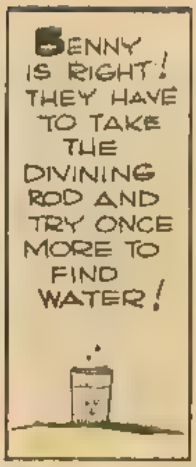


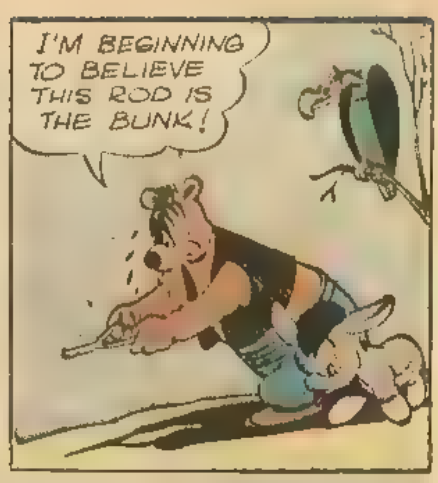


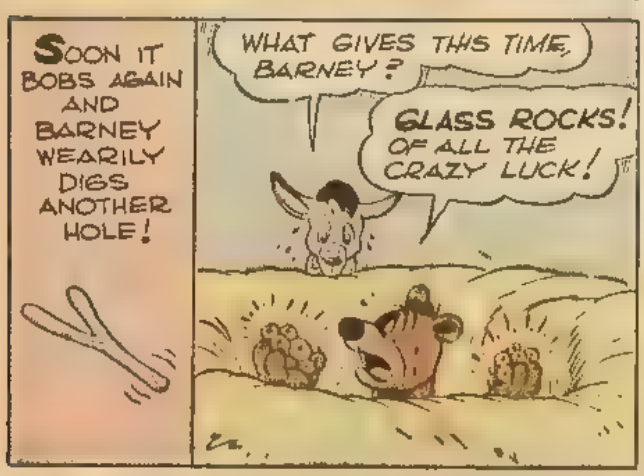


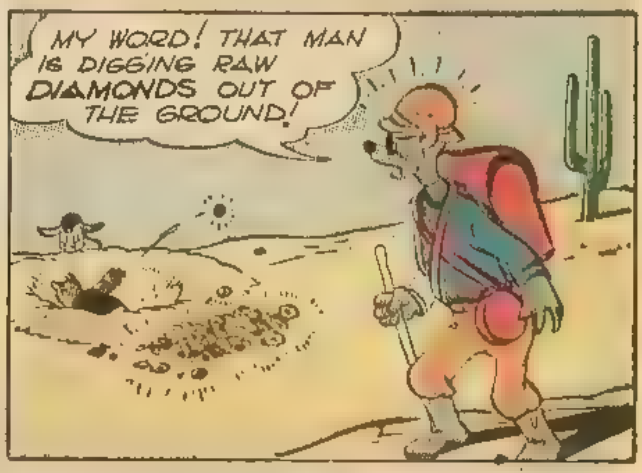


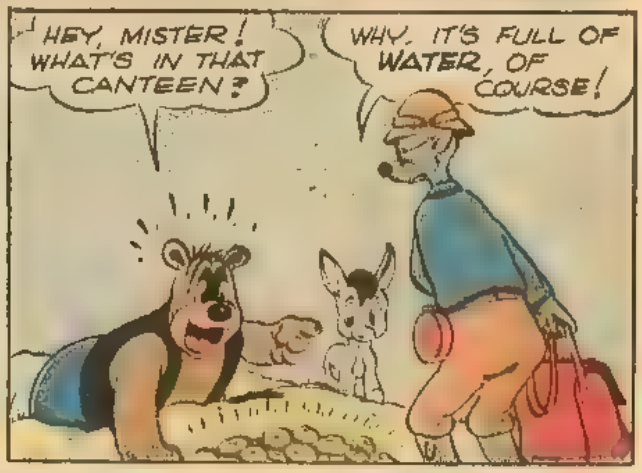


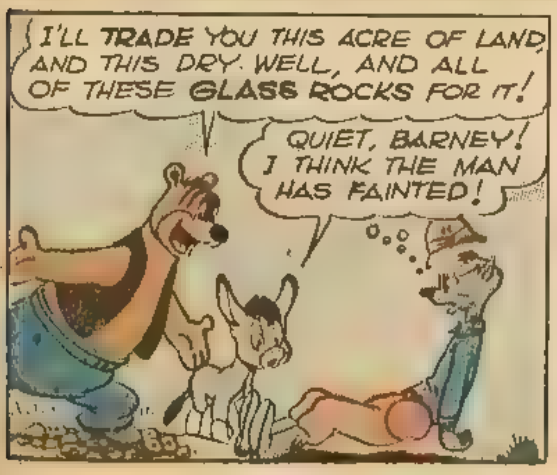












WHEN THE MAN RECOVERS THE DEAL IS MADE, AND THE STRANGER BECOMES THE OWNER OF BARNEY'S LAST TRILLION DOLLARS!
